Course Description

Drawing is a personal language with shared observable abstractions; It is the most direct response to looking at the visual world. In this class, students will develop their individual means of describing observable forms in space in relationship to one another. The class will explore drawing as transformation and experience: Structural imagery found through process, working from direct perception.

Course Outline

Each week students will draw from the model in a variety of short and/or long poses, in constructed setups. The size and scale of drawings will vary between the intimate to potentially life-sized. Students should expect to have many drawings made by the end of the semester. Past and contemporary artists and artworks will be presented as examples for discussion guiding the classwork. We will share observations and discuss each other's work. At times, critiques may extend beyond the 9:30pm end time of working with the model.

Learning Outcomes

Students will better understand the language of drawing, develop relational awareness, and how to better describe forms in space. Abstraction of time and geometry will be explored in depth. This class will consider the architecture of the overall rectangle and how to construct a figure in that dimension. Physicality in drawing, linearity, mark-making, mass, scale, rhythm, relationships between the parts to the whole, light, and all aspects of how to draw intuitively and analytically will develop. Students will use a variety of materials and increase their knowledge of artists, art history, and images.

Assessable Tasks

Individual development of visual language in formal and artistic terms is the primary basis of assessment. Attendance, participation in group discussion, and/or individual dialogues are also very important.

Evaluation and Grading

Grading is on a High Pass/Pass/Low Performance/Fail basis for NYSS MFA students. To achieve a Pass grade, students must maintain attendance, participate in discussions, and demonstrate an overall engagement with material in drawing.
